

Fig. S1. A radiograph revealed an expansile, well-defined, lytic lesion in the distal phalanx of the thumb (a). A T1-weighted precontrast MRI demonstrated near complete replacement of the bone marrow with cortical destruction (b). Post-contrast imaging demonstrated heterogeneous abnormal enhancement throughout the marrow extending into the soft tissues (c).